Q. 1. 'Judiciary is independent.' Comment.

Ans. Judiciary in India is an independent body. It is detached from the Executive and Legislative bodies of the Indian Government. Central and State Governments cannot interfere in the work of the Judiciary.

The courts are not under the government and do not act on their behalf. Judges in the High Court and the Supreme Court are appointed by the President with hardly any interference from the other branches of the government. It is very difficult to remove a judge from his post.
