

My Favorite Teacher

---

Mr. Kumar is my favorite teacher. There is something in person that makes you like him or her. The ideal ties that existed between the teacher and the taught in the good old days are nowhere to be found these days. There are many teachers by whom I have been taught from time to time. There are others with whom I have come into contact in my student life. I have always been in the good books of my teachers. Mr. Kumar is a teacher like other teachers. No one is free from shortcomings. After all, teachers, like other members of the society, are all flesh and blood. Besides other qualities a teacher possesses, I find in Mr. Kumar a keen sense of duty. He is witty and intelligent. He knows his subject thoroughly well. He takes pains to make his point clear in the class. He is always well-prepared when he comes to take his class. He makes his lecture very interesting. He never loses his temper and tries to control the class in his own way. His techniques are new and progressive. His style and approach are modern and his attitudes are pragmatic and rational. He is a regular visitor to the college library. He helps the students in finding out books on different subjects. He is a regular visitor to the college library. He helps the students in finding out books on different subjects. He is a good players of hokey. He encourages his students to read books and take part in games as well. He does not want his students to indulge in unfair means in the examinations. This has earned him unpopularity with certain sections of students but he holds on to his principles in life. I like him for his lively approach to life and its problems. May his tribe increase in the world!
